Modern Workforce Management
Business Case for Manufacturers

The Power of the Modern Workforce

The manufacturing industry has experienced significant changes in the last few years, accelerated by rapidly evolving customer demands, technological advancements, and persistent labor shortages. Your leadership position can depend on quickly identifying and adapting to opportunities. Tap into the power of your people by leveraging digital workforce management solutions to ensure your organization can operate with greater agility.

How Are You Reimagining Your Manufacturing Operations When Faced with These Industry Trends?

Hiring Costs Put Focus on Employee Retention

The ratio of post-working age to working-age individuals in manufacturing is projected to rise by 75%. This labor scarcity has intensified talent competition and caused churn rate costs to balloon to more than $5.3 billion every year in talent acquisition and training costs.<sup>1</sup>

Growing Demand for Flexible Scheduling

Deskless workers increasingly expect their employers to offer flexible working arrangements, such as flexible shifts, shift swapping, and split shifts. Nearly 50% of manufacturing employers are offering flexible scheduling to production workers.<sup>2</sup>

Strong Employee Experience Improves Productivity

Providing a better employee experience is crucial for retaining skilled workers in a competitive labor market but can also improve worker productivity. 49% of manufacturers say optimized productivity is a top benefit of implementing an employee experience strategy.<sup>3</sup>

Critical Need for Strategic Workforce Technology

When frontline workers are provided a thoughtful and strategic mix of technology to perform their jobs, productivity is estimated to increase on average by 22%. Organizations that have the highest degree of digital connectivity and empowerment—that involves 75% of their frontline workers—saw more than 20% growth.<sup>4</sup>

“85% of manufacturing leaders said they understand the importance of investing in new workforce management technology to aid the learning and development of their deskless workforce in the next one to two years.”

An Urgent Call to Action for Employers to Improve Employee Experience

Manufacturers are struggling to retain and attract skilled production workers. This is a result of an aging workforce, fewer younger workers entering manufacturing roles, and a climbing employee turnover rate. Employers are evaluating how to better engage and support their hourly frontline workers. Implementing new workplace tools and practices that address deskless workers' overlooked needs is key.

The Third Annual Global Employee Experience Study provides an analysis of perceptions on the importance of employee experience aspects resulting from surveying employees and managers, including a focus on hourly shift workers.

Over the last three years, our study findings have shown increasing alignment in perception by employers and employees of the ability to deliver capabilities that create a good employee experience.

When we hone in on the changing perception of employees year over year, the results further reinforce the significant importance of these elements for employees. For instance, the overall percentage of employees who recognize the importance of flexible scheduling has increased by twenty-five points.

The only experience aspect that saw a point decrease was the percentage of employees who feel their employer recognizes their contributions. Though the change may seem nominal, it indicates the need for stronger organizational efforts to recognize employee achievements.

This is an urgent call to action for employers to make investments that improve these agreed upon experience challenges. For organizations, responding to issues that matter to their employees holds significant value—often in the form of tangible business cost benefits, including improved retention, productivity, and greater customer satisfaction.

Now that employers recognize the importance of employee experience, it is imperative that organizations meet employee needs with actions that address the underlying problems contributing to their dissatisfaction.

Getting Cross-Departmental Collaboration and Buy-In When Building Your Business Case

It's in every department's best interest—whether it's human resources and finance or operations and IT—to collaborate and create a shared vision of the benefits of evolving your workforce practices (and using software to facilitate it).

Here's what each team offers and why they should be part of the process:

Human Resources

Due to high levels of attrition in the manufacturing industry (i.e., accelerated retirements, competition for tech-savvy talent with other industries, and safety, well-being, and work/life balance concerns), human resources teams are focused on creating positive employee experiences that drive engagement, productivity, and loyalty. This includes a safe work environment, compliance with labor and absence/leave laws, contractual agreements, flexible scheduling, and skills development for career progression.

As the leading department for most employee experience initiatives, HR can set the tone by determining specific workforce management needs and requirements, taking note of current HR software that could be consolidated and getting employee feedback on proposed solutions.

Finance

Investing in modern workforce management is proven to deliver the highest ROI of any other human capital management initiatives. CFOs and finance teams confirm quantifiable cost savings and business benefits from workforce management investments across financial, operations, and risk metrics.

ROI supported by KPIs, including labor cost optimization, reduced turnover costs, and costs avoidance associated with noncompliance, can be used to gain support from finance leaders for a workforce management technology investment. Savings from these solutions can often fund other HR digital transformation initiatives.

Operations

To keep manufacturing facilities running smoothly in the face of ongoing supply chain disruptions and labor shortages with no clear end in sight, it's imperative to retain staff who want to bring their best selves to work—when and where they are needed. Teams that oversee day-to-day operations must balance giving employees a say in their schedules to support work/life balance with meeting productivity expectations (including labor budget management) and delivering on smart factory and reshoring directives.

The interaction operations managers have with frontline workers puts them in the perfect position to surface critical pain points and ways to improve processes and workflows. They inherently understand the effect engaged employees have on employee productivity and can leverage digital assistants to identify and automate actions to support both.

Information Technology

The IT department will be a valuable partner in executing a manufacturing workforce strategy, ensuring any technology selected meets corporate performance and security standards, and monitoring its adoption (and success rate) once rolled out.

IT can review documentation and proof points on IT-focused areas to advance an implementation. They can help confirm the solution is the right fit for current or planned infrastructure. This includes employee support plans and processes, capabilities for integrating with other business-critical systems, and the required effort to maintain and support the solution in-house.
